HIJACK SYNDROMES: Whatever Happened in London, Stockholm and Lima?
December 19, 2017

The practice of hostage-taking and kidnapping has a long and established history, both in aviation-related incidents and other situations. Hostages have been known to react to captivity in a variety of ways, sometimes using their behaviour to manipulate their captors' actions, and ultimately affecting the outcome of the situation. Lucy Rawlings examines this behaviour...

Big Data: moving from reactive to proactive security
By Xiaoyong Yang
December 19, 2017

It wasn't so long ago that the aviation security industry was complaining about a lack of access to consistent and reliable information. These days we know more about our passengers than ever before, and can stay abreast of events occurring anywhere in the world at all times. In fact, with the advent of 'big data', aviation security professionals need to be able to...

GASep: Words to be Translated into Action by Philip Baum

Call me cynical, but I just can't get excited about this November's approval, by the ICAO Council, of the Global Aviation Security Plan (GASep). Certainly, we should welcome any initiative which strives to improve the effectiveness of aviation security protocols and which drives states to achieve globally accepted minimum standards designed to respond to the multitude of threats and risks to which the industry is exposed. However, as Alexandre de...
